The effect of two dietary phosphorus levels on the growth performance, phosphorus and iron uptake, and phosphorus and iron retention in the brown seaweed Dictyopteris delicatula was studied. Juvenile D. delicatula were fed a commercial pelleted diet containing five concentrations of inorganic and organic phosphorus in the range of 5-29 g kg(-1). Results showed that increasing dietary phosphorus concentration reduced growth performance. Whole-body phosphorus and iron content, and phosphorus/iron retention were significantly higher in the low-P treatments compared with the high-P treatments. In contrast, phosphorus and iron content of harvested D. delicatula were significantly higher in the high-P treatments than in the low-P treatments. The phosphorus content of the pelleted diet ranged from 27-31% and the dietary phosphorus concentration ranged from 9.24-16.40 g kg(-1). Dietary phosphorus concentration was the main factor affecting growth, whole-body phosphorus and iron content, and phosphorus and iron retention in this study. Bilateral external auditory canal chondrodermatitis, bilateral canine neoplasia and tricuspid regurgitation in a young dog. This report describes a 12-month-old female German Shepherd dog with a 4-week history of bilateral external auditory canal chondrodermatitis, tricuspid regurgitation and canine non-ossifying fibroma with leiomyoma. Several months later, the dog was euthanised after developing an acute pain syndrome. Necropsy findings included bilateral canine non-ossifying fibroma and leiomyoma with chondrodermatitis, which was identified as congenital in a young dog with tricuspid regurgitation. This is the first published description of a genetic association
