7. Remember when we all scoffed at the first iPhone? Our version of the first iPhone was a Nokia N800. Well, if the folks over at PortableApps.com had their way, the first iPhone would have been the iPad, not the iPhone. The plot: In this fantasy world, the iPhone is a “dumb phone” stuck in an antediluvian era. The iPad is a “smart phone” that provides a gateway to the wondrous world of the web, the GUI, and even the cloud. In their version of the future, any MacOS application can be ported to the iPad and run natively on it — and vice versa. Here’s how they envision it: The maker of this fantasy world has taken a long hard look at the past and the present. Here’s what he sees: * developers assumed that just because a product could run on an iPad, it would necessarily be better than a desktop computer. Not so — the iPad can't do what a desktop computer does for example. * Not all applications really needed to run on mobile devices. * apps on mobile devices just can't be the same as apps on desktops. * customers often expect something that looks like
